Description of Field:

The international relations field exists in a broad range of industries that function on a global scale. International relations is concerned with the interactions between nations within the international system. This can include regional or global politics, education, public policy, nonprofit organizations, environmental industries, government relations, law, international security, health, and many other globally focused organizations.

General Skills:

Communication, possibly with the ability to speak multiple languages, ability to relate to others, adaptability, analytical reasoning, teamwork, conflict resolution

Insider Advice:

Having joint degrees and experience in international relations and related fields give employers the sense that an individual possesses transferrable skills. It is important to research different fields that have an international focus in order to narrow in on an interest. Employers also look for the amount of cross cultural awareness, language skills, and actual experience working with other cultures or traveling to other countries.
